What's Happenin' at the Watermen's Museum

TWM exists to preserve, document and share the history, traditions, heritage and culture of our watermen's community. This model of a pound net, crafted by Frazier Stanley Covington is a favorite with visitors. Many have seen the poles sticking up out of the water on the bay side. This model shows what is happening under the water. When the fish hit the leader line in shallow water and try to swim deeper, they pass through the big and little hearts then get "caught" in the crib where they are scooped out, tagged and taken to market. To enhance this exhibit, a display of Bill Cummings' prints show how it was done back in the early days. Photos of the Wilson men fishing the nets show how technology has taken some of the heavy lifting out of the job. Stop by the museum to enjoy our "Tilghman Back in the Day" exhibit Saturdays and Sundays from 10-3.

ATTENTION WATERMEN & WOMEN: We are currently scheduling the next generation for oral history interviews. Contact: linda.haddaway.king@gmail.com or 410-886-1190
