Join us for a special presentation by renowned Annapolis-based photographer, Jay Fleming.

Jay specializes in documenting complex interactions between humans and the water. His documentation of the iconic seafood industry proved to be an incredibly powerful educational tool in raising awareness for the people and the processes involved with bringing commonly consumed seafood products to market. After 10 years of making trips to Smith and Tangier Islands - the two only inhabited offshore islands in the Chesapeake Bay - Jay developed an affinity for the environment and the island communities. His most recent book, Island Life explores the environment and the seasonal Chesapeake harvests that provide the rhythm for community life, while documenting the tenacity and determination of the Smith and Tangier islanders who honor their traditions while facing an uncertain future.

Whether it's a dramatic sunrise over the water or a fishermen hauling gear, the passion for his craft and for visual storytelling is obvious in every photograph. His photography is not only beautiful but purposeful. Jay offers on-the-water workshops to fellow photographers, fine art prints and books of his photographs, along with commercial and editorial photography services for businesses and publications.

This event is free and open to the public but donations are gratefully accepted.
